Preparing farming partners to adapt & thrive through change

The next drought is coming, prices will swing, costs are rising, and regulations are tightening.

Change and uncertainty and the resulting risks and opportunities are not new. But the pace and scale of change facing kiwi farmers is.

Navigating your farming business through accelerating change starts at the kitchen table with calm and open minds, business plans and financial accounts open.

Resilience is a skill. It can be learnt and starts with investing time in preparation. Our Resilient Farming Business is a chance for farming partners to take time out to work purely on their business instead of in their business – sharing the load together.

What to expect from the programme

- Recognise how you respond change and how to embrace it
- Understand how financially resilient your business is
- Identify risks and opportunities ahead of time
- Practical tools for 'what if' scenario planning & conversations
- Confidence to decide where to focus & prioritise resources, whatever comes your way
- A realistic action plan that builds resilience into your business
- Access to tools and support networks that help build resilience
- Guidance and support from expert facilitators
- Connections and learning with like-minded farmers

Who is this programme for?

Sheep, beef and dairy farmers are invited to take part. Places are limited to 7 partnerships (14 people) per programme.

Farming partners participate together – couples, owner/manager, mother/son, father/son or similar. You will need to have:

- Access to financial accounts for your farming business
- Ability to understand and read financial accounts (profit or loss statement & balance sheet)
- Ability to prepare and understand a farm budget
